

A Raisin In The Sun Screenplay

[illegible]

A Raisin in the Sun is a seminal work in American theater, written by Lorraine Hansberry and first performed on Broadway in 1959. The screenplay is a poignant exploration of the struggles faced by an African American family in Chicago's South Side as they grapple with economic hardship, racial discrimination, and the pursuit of the American Dream. The narrative centers around the Younger family, who are waiting for a $10,000 insurance check following the death of the patriarch, and it delves into their conflicting aspirations and dreams. This article will provide a comprehensive analysis of the screenplay, its themes, characters, and its significance in American literature and culture.

Background of the Play

Author and Historical Context

Lorraine Hansberry was the first African American woman to have a play produced on Broadway. Born in Chicago in 1930, her experiences growing up in a racially segregated environment greatly influenced her writing. "A Raisin in the Sun" was created during the Civil Rights Movement, a time of significant social change in the United States, which gave the play its urgency and relevance. The screenplay reflects the struggles against systemic racism and the quest for identity that many African Americans faced during this period.

Plot Summary

The screenplay revolves around the Younger family, consisting of:

1. Lena Younger (Mama): The matriarch of the family who dreams of buying a house with the insurance money.
2. Walter Lee Younger: Mama's son, who is frustrated with his job as a chauffeur and yearns for a better life.
3. Ruth Younger: Walter's weary wife who is trying to hold the family together amid financial strain.

4. Beneatha Younger: Walter's sister, an ambitious college student who explores her identity and dreams of becoming a doctor.
5. Travis Younger: Walter and Ruth's young son, who represents the future generation.

The family is anticipating a $10,000 insurance check, which leads to various conflicts about how the money should be spent. Walter wants to invest in a liquor store, while Mama dreams of buying a house to fulfill her late husband's dream. Beneatha seeks funds for her medical school tuition, challenging traditional gender roles and cultural expectations.

Themes Explored in the Screenplay

The American Dream

At the heart of "A Raisin in the Sun" is the exploration of the American Dream, particularly from an African American perspective. Each character embodies a different facet of this dream:

- Walter Lee Younger: Sees wealth and business ownership as the ultimate fulfillment of the American Dream.
- Beneatha Younger: Represents intellectual and personal aspirations, challenging societal norms.
- Mama: Holds onto the traditional values of family and home as essential components of a fulfilled life.

The screenplay poses important questions about the accessibility of the American Dream and highlights the barriers faced by marginalized communities.

Racial Discrimination and Identity

The screenplay powerfully addresses the systemic racism that the Younger family encounters. Their aspirations are often thwarted by societal prejudices, exemplified by the antagonism they face when aiming to move into a predominantly white neighborhood. The character of Karl Lindner, who offers to buy out the Youngers to prevent them from moving in, embodies the racism and discrimination prevalent in society.

Additionally, Beneatha's search for identity as a Black woman is a crucial part of the narrative. Her exploration of African heritage and her rejection of assimilationist attitudes reflect the broader cultural awakening within the African American community during the 1960s.

Gender Roles and Feminism

The screenplay also engages with issues of gender and the roles of women in society. Ruth represents the traditional female role of a caregiver, while Beneatha challenges these expectations by pursuing her education and career ambitions. The tension between these roles is a significant source of conflict within the family, showcasing the struggles women face in asserting their desires in a patriarchal society.

Character Analysis

Lena Younger (Mama)

Mama is a symbol of strength and resilience, embodying the hopes and dreams of her deceased husband. Her desire to buy a house reflects her belief in the importance of family stability and legacy. Mama's character represents the struggle of many African American women who have to bear the weight of their family's aspirations.

Walter Lee Younger

Walter is a complex character driven by ambition and frustration. His desperation for financial success leads him to make questionable decisions, reflecting the overwhelming pressures of poverty and societal expectations. Throughout the screenplay, Walter evolves, ultimately realizing that dignity and family are more valuable than wealth.

Beneatha Younger

Beneatha is the embodiment of the younger generation's struggle for identity and independence. Her character challenges traditional gender norms and explores her African heritage, making her a pioneer for feminist and cultural discussions. Her journey is marked by conflict with her family, especially with her brother Walter, as she seeks to carve out her own path.

Ruth Younger

Ruth serves as a grounding force within the family, often caught between her husband's dreams and her own survival instincts. Her character showcases the struggles of women in maintaining familial harmony while pursuing personal happiness.

Significance of the Screenplay

Cultural Impact

"A Raisin in the Sun" was groundbreaking for its portrayal of an African American family on stage, offering audiences an authentic depiction of their struggles and aspirations. It opened doors for more diverse stories in theater and laid the groundwork for future generations of playwrights.

Legacy

The play has been adapted into several films, including a notable 1961 version featuring Sidney Poitier and Ruby Dee. Its themes remain relevant today, resonating with ongoing discussions about race, identity, and the pursuit of dreams in America. The screenplay continues to be studied in academic settings and performed across the world, cementing its place as a classic in American literature.

Conclusion

In conclusion, Lorraine Hansberry's "A Raisin in the Sun" is more than just a play; it is a profound commentary on the African American experience and the complexities of the American Dream. Through its rich characters and compelling themes, the screenplay invites audiences to reflect on issues of race, identity, and the enduring quest for dignity and fulfillment. Its timeless relevance ensures that it will continue to inspire and challenge future generations, making it a cornerstone of American theater and literature.
