The Arrival of Africans in Louisiana

The history of Black people in Louisiana begins in the early 18th century, shortly after the French established a colony in the region. The first recorded arrival of enslaved Africans occurred in 1719 when a ship brought them from the West Indies. This marked the beginning of a significant African presence in the state.

The plantation system became the backbone of the state's economy, leading to the establishment of a brutal and oppressive system of slavery. Key aspects of this period include:

1. The Code Noir: Established in 1724, this set of laws governed the conduct of enslaved people and their owners, defining their rights and regulating the treatment of slaves. It aimed to control the lives of enslaved Africans and maintain the institution of slavery.
2. Cultural Retention: Despite the harsh conditions, enslaved Africans managed to retain elements of their cultural heritage. They brought with them traditions, languages, and belief systems that would later contribute to the unique Creole culture of Louisiana.
