Origins of the Book of the Law

The Revelation

The Book of the Law was purportedly dictated to Aleister Crowley by a spiritual entity named Aiwass during his stay in Cairo, Egypt. This experience occurred during a 3-day period from April 8 to April 10, 1904. Crowley described Aiwass as his "Holy Guardian Angel," a concept central to his spiritual philosophy.

- The circumstances of this revelation are steeped in mystique:

1. Crowley was in Cairo with his wife, Rose.
2. Rose began to exhibit unusual behavior, claiming to receive messages from an Egyptian deity.
3. After a series of events, Crowley began to transcribe what he believed were the words of Aiwass.

Structure and Content

The Book of the Law is divided into three chapters, each attributed to different deities:

1. Chapter I - Nuit: The goddess of the night sky, representing infinite space and possibilities.
2. Chapter II - Hadit: The god of the individual and the central point of existence.
3. Chapter III - Ra-Hoor-Khuit: A form of Horus, representing the force of divine will and the warrior aspect of the divine.

Each chapter presents various themes and concepts central to Thelema and Crowley's belief system.
