Chapter 14 of this historical narrative delves into the early causes and manifestations of this economic catastrophe. Understanding the vocabulary associated with this chapter is crucial for grasping the complex events and ideas that led to and characterized the Great Depression. In this article, we will explore key terms, concepts, and the historical context of Chapter 14, establishing a comprehensive vocabulary foundation for further study.

1. Background of the Great Depression

Before diving into the vocabulary, it is essential to understand the context of the Great Depression. The decade of the 1920s, often referred to as the "Roaring Twenties," was marked by economic prosperity, technological advancements, and cultural changes. However, this period also sowed the seeds for the economic collapse that would follow.

The stock market crash of October 1929 is often cited as the starting point of the Great Depression.

This event triggered a chain reaction of financial failures, bank closures, and rising unemployment that devastated economies worldwide.

Key Factors Leading to the Great Depression

Several factors contributed to the onset of the Great Depression, including:

- Stock Market Speculation: The rapid rise in stock prices throughout the 1920s led to rampant speculation. Many investors purchased stocks on margin, borrowing money to buy shares with the hope of selling them for a profit.
- Bank Failures: As stock prices plummeted, banks that had invested heavily in the stock market faced insolvency. The failure of banks resulted in significant losses for depositors, leading to a loss of public confidence in the financial system.
- Overproduction: Industries produced more goods than consumers could buy, leading to a surplus of products. This overproduction caused prices to fall, resulting in decreased profits and layoffs.
- Declining International Trade: Tariffs such as the Smoot-Hawley Tariff of 1930 raised import duties, leading to retaliatory measures from other countries. This resulted in a significant decline in international trade, further exacerbating the economic crisis.
