The hotel was commissioned by the prominent businessman and hotelier, L. Eugene Eley, who envisioned a luxurious seaside destination that would attract affluent visitors.

Architectural Design

The design of the Cavalier Hotel reflects the Colonial Revival style, characterized by its grandiose façade, symmetrical design, and intricate details. The architectural firm responsible for the design was the renowned firm of H. A. Houghton, which incorporated various elements that would later define the hotel's aesthetic.

Key features of the architectural design include:

- Red-brick exterior: The hotel's structure is primarily composed of red brick, giving it a classic and timeless appearance.
