Born on November 17, 1998, in San Francisco, California, Haney has made significant strides in his career, earning a reputation not just for his skill but also for his ability to command substantial purses. This article delves deep into the various aspects of Haney's financial journey, including his early career earnings, significant fights, and the factors influencing his purse size.

Early Career Earnings

Devon Haney turned professional at just 17 years old, making his debut in 2015. As a young fighter, his early bouts did not generate significant financial returns. However, Haney quickly established himself as a rising star in boxing.

Initial Fights and Purses

- Debut Fight (2015): Haney fought his first professional match against a relatively unknown opponent, where he earned a modest purse of approximately $5,000.
- Subsequent Fights (2016-2018): As he gained experience and began to attract attention, his purses started to increase:
- 2016: Fought in smaller venues with purses around $10,000 to $15,000.
- 2017: His profile grew, and he began to earn between $20,000 and $30,000 per fight.

- 2018: Haney fought more frequently, and his average purse reached around $50,000.

By the end of 2018, Devin Haney had established himself as a promising talent in the lightweight division, which paved the way for more lucrative opportunities.

Signing with Matchroom Boxing

In 2019, Haney signed a multi-fight deal with Matchroom Boxing, a significant milestone that dramatically increased his earning potential. This partnership allowed him to fight on larger platforms and in more prominent venues.

Impact of Matchroom Signing

- Increased Visibility: Fighting on platforms like DAZN provided Haney with a broader audience, increasing his marketability.
- Higher Purses: His purses quickly escalated, with fights earning him upwards of $200,000.
- Prominent Fights: The deal led to significant bouts, including:
- A title eliminator against Zaur Abdullaev in September 2019, where he earned around $300,000.
- His first major title fight against Alfredo Santiago in November 2019, with a purse of approximately $500,000.

The partnership with Matchroom put Haney on a trajectory toward stardom, with his earnings reflecting his rising status.
