Types of Ships

1. Fighter Ships: Fast and agile, these ships are ideal for combat. They typically have high maneuverability but lower cargo space.
2. Freighter Ships: Designed for hauling cargo, freighters have larger storage capacities but are slower and less equipped for combat.
3. Transport Ships: A balance between fighters and freighters, transport ships can carry a decent amount of cargo while still being able to defend themselves.

Upgrading Your Ship

Upgrades play a significant role in enhancing your ship's performance. Here are some crucial upgrades to consider:

- Weapons: Invest in better weapons to improve your combat effectiveness.
- Shields: Upgrading your shields increases your survivability during battles.

2. Use Tactical Maneuvers: Utilize evasive maneuvers to dodge incoming fire. Always keep moving to make yourself a harder target.
3. Choose the Right Weapon: Select weapons based on your enemy's armor. For example, energy weapons can be effective against shielded opponents, while projectile weapons are better for unshielded targets.

Fighting Faction Battles

Faction battles can be intense and rewarding. Here's how to approach them:

- Assess the Faction: Before engaging, understand the capabilities of the faction you're facing.
- Join Allies: Partnering with NPC allies can significantly increase your chances of success.
- Know When to Retreat: If the odds are against you, don't hesitate to retreat and regroup.

Trading and Economy

Trading is one of the key elements in Galaxy on Fire 2, allowing you to accumulate wealth and upgrade your ship.

Understanding the Economy

The game features a dynamic economy where supply and demand fluctuate. Here are some tips for effective trading:

- Research Market Prices: Regularly check prices at different stations. Some goods can sell for significantly more in specific star systems.
- Trade Routes: Establish a trade route between stations where you can buy low and sell high.
