Who should rule?	Who should rule?
The elite are best prepared to govern for the rest of the nation. They did not trust the people to rule themselves, and envisioned a government at a distance from regular people.	They saw elites as corrupt, and wanted to include more people in the democratic process to balance it out. More elections more often could address this concern.
Which plan is best?	Which plan is best?
The New Constitution: a powerful central government, two houses in Congress, three branches with checks and balances, less direct and more representative democracy	The Articles of Confederation: strong state governments, weak central government, frequent elections and more direct democracy
What about my rights?	What about my rights?
The Constitution creates a central government with limited powers. There is no threat to individual rights. And each state constitution has its own bill of rights.	A Bill of Rights is necessary to protect the rights of citizens. The proposed Constitution does not do enough.
What about the states?	What about the states?
States need to be organized under a larger, more powerful central government. New Constitution shares power with the states. And you can't have a federal government without the states.	The states should maintain their power and not lose that power to a central government. New Constitution will destroy the state governments.
Power tripping	Power tripping
The executive branch is important, and a president is necessary to enforce laws and conduct foreign policy. The Constitution sets up many limits on this position's level of power and influence.	A president is basically an elected king. The Constitution gives this role too much power among the three branches. They doubted the peaceful transfer of power from one president to the next.
Role of the Courts	Role of the Courts
The Supreme Court is the weakest branch; it can't pass laws or control the military. It's an appropriate part of the three branches and the proposed system of checks and balances.	The Constitution creates a Supreme Court that is too strong—the justices don't have to answer to anyone.

The Federalist Debate: An Overview

The Federalist Debate refers to the discussions and arguments surrounding the ratification of the United States Constitution in the late 18th century. This debate primarily took place between two factions: the Federalists, who supported the new Constitution, and the Anti-Federalists, who opposed it.

The Federalists

The Federalists, led by figures such as Alexander Hamilton, James Madison, and John Jay, advocated for a strong central government. They believed that a robust federal system was necessary to maintain order, protect individual rights, and promote economic stability. Key points made by the Federalists included:

1. Need for a Strong Central Government: They argued that the Articles of Confederation were too weak to govern effectively.
2. Checks and Balances: Federalists believed that a system of checks and balances would prevent any one branch of government from becoming too powerful.
3. Protection of Rights: They contended that a Bill of Rights was unnecessary because the Constitution itself provided sufficient safeguards for individual liberties.

The Anti-Federalists

In contrast, the Anti-Federalists, including prominent figures like Patrick Henry and George Mason, feared that a strong central government would lead to tyranny. Their main arguments included:

1. Fear of Centralized Power: They believed that a powerful federal government would overshadow state governments and violate individual rights.
2. Demand for a Bill of Rights: Anti-Federalists insisted that explicit protections for individual liberties were essential to prevent government overreach.
3. Preference for a Confederation: They argued for a system that maintained more power at the state level, fearing that citizens would lose their influence over government decisions.

The Federalist Papers, a series of essays written by Hamilton, Madison, and Jay, played a crucial role in articulating the Federalist position and addressing the concerns of the Anti-Federalists. These essays not only defended the Constitution but also explained the principles behind the new government structure.
