Background

Jennifer Thompson

Jennifer Thompson was a college student at the time of her assault in 1984. Raised in a supportive family, she was known for her intelligence and determination. On the night of the incident, she was brutally raped in her apartment in Burlington, North Carolina. The experience was traumatic, leaving lasting psychological scars. Ronald Cotton

Ronald Cotton was a young man living in Burlington, North Carolina, at the same time as Thompson. He was working various jobs to support himself and his family. After being wrongfully accused of Thompson's rape, Cotton's life was irrevocably changed. He became a victim of the very system designed to protect the innocent, facing a lengthy prison sentence for a crime he did not commit.

The Incident

The assault on Jennifer Thompson occurred on July 29, 1984. After the attack, she was taken to the hospital, where a rape kit was administered. The police investigation swiftly led to the collection of evidence, including a description of the assailant based on Thompson's recollection.

Identification Process

One of the critical moments in the case came when Jennifer Thompson was asked to identify her attacker from a police lineup. Under significant emotional distress and pressure, she mistakenly identified Ronald Cotton as her assailant. This misidentification was rooted in the psychological phenomenon known as "memory distortion," where a victim's traumatic experience can lead to errors in recalling details.

The Trial and Conviction
