The Stages of Grief

Grief is often described in stages, a model that helps individuals understand their emotional responses. While not everyone experiences all stages, they can provide a framework for comprehending one's feelings. The stages include:

1. Denial: The initial response to loss, where individuals may struggle to accept reality.
2. Anger: Frustration and helplessness can lead to anger, directed towards oneself, others, or even the deceased.
3. Bargaining: A phase where individuals may try to negotiate or make deals in an attempt to reverse the loss.
4. Depression: A deep sense of sadness and despair that can settle in after the initial shock wears off.
