This article will explore the geographical boundaries, administrative divisions, and significant cities of the Mughal Empire, along with the historical context that shaped its expansion.

Geographical Boundaries of the Mughal Empire

The Mughal Empire's boundaries fluctuated over time due to conquests, treaties, and internal strife. At its zenith in the late 17th century, the empire covered a large area that included:

1. Northern India: The heartland of the empire, encompassing present-day states like Uttar Pradesh, Haryana, Punjab, Bihar, and parts of Uttarakhand.
2. Western India: Including Rajasthan and Gujarat, where the Mughals faced resistance from local Rajput kingdoms.
3. Central India: A significant region that included modern Madhya Pradesh and parts of Maharashtra.
4. Eastern India: Encompassing Bengal and Assam, which were crucial for trade and agriculture.
5. Southern India: The Mughal influence extended into parts of the Deccan Plateau, including regions of modern-day Karnataka and Andhra Pradesh.

Key Historical Periods of Expansion

- Early Expansion (1526-1556): The foundation of the Mughal Empire began with Babur's victory at the Battle of Panipat in 1526. During this period, the empire primarily included northern India.
- Akbar's Reign (1556-1605): Under Emperor Akbar, the empire expanded significantly to include most of northern and central India. Akbar's policies of religious tolerance and administrative reforms helped consolidate his rule.
- Shah Jahan's Era (1628-1658): This period saw the empire reach its territorial peak, with successful campaigns in the Deccan and against the Portuguese in the west.
- Aurangzeb's Rule (1658-1707): Although the empire expanded further into southern India, internal dissent and religious policies led to fragmentation and decline.

Administrative Divisions of the Mughal Empire

The Mughal Empire was known for its sophisticated administrative structure, which was crucial for managing its vast territories. The empire was divided into provinces known as Subahs, which were further subdivided into districts called Parganas.

1. Subahs: The major provinces included:
 - Punjab
 - Bengal
 - Awadh (Oudh)
 - Malwa
 - Gujarat
 - Deccan (which included parts of modern Maharashtra and Karnataka)
2. Parganas: Each Subah was divided into several Parganas, which were responsible for local administration, tax collection, and law enforcement.
3. Mansabdari System: This was a unique military and administrative system wherein officials, known as Mansabdars, were assigned ranks (mansabs) and given land grants in exchange for military service. This system helped the Mughals maintain control over their vast territories.
