

Presenting Problems In Therapy

Essay by  IvyPanda®

Client Presenting Problem: Psychotherapy

 Exclusively available on IvyPanda

The client decided to seek professional help because she was suffering from a mental disorder. June, a 26-year-old African American lady, reported having cases of self-injury. The proof of the disorder had manifested on her thighs and biceps accompanied by the two suicidal attempts. The first case was reported when she was an adolescent after trying to overdose. She used the same technique six months ago in the second case. The patient was described to have chronic suicidal ideation, which would act as a relief to her.

Symptoms and Reasons for Referral

The symptoms were the main reason why she opted for professional help. The signs comprised the anger she felt against her partner despite being in a healthy romantic relationship (Şavk, 2022). The anxiety manifested as she thought of how her partner would leave her because of the habits she portrayed. The two suicidal attempts fall in the same category as they could be used as a confluence for seeking professional assistance. The different moods she experienced with her partner signify that she had emotional dysregulation.

June was not satisfied even after the engagement with her partner. Impulsivity manifests through her actions, making it necessary to ask for help. The mood cycles that made her change hobbies, attire, and job could be identified as a symptom requiring attention. Throwing objects at her partner and overdosing twice showed she engaged in risky behaviors which would require further attention. The cuts on her arms and legs were assurance that she needed a therapy session. Suicidal ideation shows she required immediate care and a way out of the situation she could have been going through.

Presenting problems in therapy are the issues or concerns that individuals bring to therapy sessions, serving as the primary focus for treatment. Understanding these problems is crucial for both the therapist and the client, as they set the stage for the therapeutic journey. The presenting problem can encompass a range of emotional, psychological, and behavioral issues that significantly impact a person's life. This article delves into the nature of presenting problems in therapy, their identification, common types, and how therapists address them to facilitate healing and personal growth.

Understanding Presenting Problems

Presenting problems are often the symptoms of deeper issues that a client may not initially recognize. They can manifest in various forms, including anxiety, depression, relationship difficulties, or stress-related challenges. The identification and exploration of these problems are essential in establishing a therapeutic alliance and creating an effective treatment plan.

The Role of the Therapist

Therapists play a vital role in helping clients articulate and understand their presenting problems. This often involves:

1. Active Listening: Therapists listen attentively to clients' concerns, allowing them to express their feelings and thoughts without judgment.
2. Empathy and Support: Providing a safe space for clients to explore their issues, which fosters trust and openness.
3. Clarification: Helping clients clarify their concerns and distinguish between their presenting problems and underlying issues.
4. Assessment: Utilizing various assessment tools to better understand the nature and impact of the presenting problems.

Common Types of Presenting Problems

Presenting problems can be categorized into several broad areas, each with unique characteristics and implications for therapy. Below are some of the most common types of presenting problems:

1. Emotional Issues

- Anxiety Disorders: Many clients present with symptoms of anxiety, including excessive worry, panic attacks, or social phobia. These issues can interfere with daily functioning and lead to avoidance behaviors.
- Depression: Clients may report feelings of sadness, hopelessness, or a lack of motivation. Depression can manifest physically, emotionally, and cognitively.
- Mood Swings: Fluctuating emotions that can lead to instability in relationships and self-image.

2. Relational Problems

- Couples Therapy: Issues such as communication breakdown, infidelity, or growing apart often lead couples to seek therapy.

- Family Dynamics: Family conflicts, parenting challenges, or issues related to family history can be significant presenting problems.

3. Behavioral Issues

- Addiction: Substance abuse, gambling, or other addictive behaviors often lead clients to seek help.

- Anger Management: Clients may struggle with controlling their anger, leading to conflicts at home or work.

4. Trauma and Abuse

- Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD): Clients who have experienced trauma may present with symptoms such as flashbacks, nightmares, or severe anxiety.

- Childhood Abuse: Many clients carry the burden of past abuse, which can manifest in various emotional and relational issues.

Identifying Presenting Problems

The process of identifying presenting problems is integral to effective therapy. Therapists often use specific strategies to uncover these issues:

1. Initial Assessment

During the initial sessions, therapists may use various assessment methods, including:

- Clinical Interviews: Open-ended questions that allow clients to share their concerns in their own words.

- Standardized Questionnaires: Tools designed to assess specific symptoms and issues (e.g., Beck Depression Inventory, Generalized Anxiety Disorder Scale).

2. Exploration of History

Understanding a client's history can reveal patterns and triggers related to their presenting problems. Therapists may explore:

- Family Background: Relationships with family members and any history of mental health issues.

- Life Events: Significant life changes or traumatic experiences that may have contributed to the presenting problem.

3. Goal Setting

After identifying the presenting problems, therapists work with clients to establish goals. This involves:

- Collaborative Goal Setting: Clients and therapists collaborate to create achievable, measurable goals for therapy.
- Prioritizing Issues: Determining which problems to address first based on urgency and client readiness.

Addressing Presenting Problems in Therapy

Once presenting problems have been identified, therapists implement various therapeutic approaches tailored to the client's needs. Here are some commonly used methods:

1. Cognitive-Behavioral Therapy (CBT)

CBT is an evidence-based approach effective for treating many presenting problems, particularly anxiety and depression. Key components include:

- Cognitive Restructuring: Challenging and changing negative thought patterns.
- Behavioral Activation: Encouraging clients to engage in activities that improve mood.

2. Psychodynamic Therapy

This approach focuses on exploring the unconscious processes that influence behavior. Therapists work to uncover:

- Past Experiences: How childhood experiences affect present behavior.
- Defense Mechanisms: Understanding how clients protect themselves from emotional pain.

3. Humanistic Therapy

Humanistic approaches emphasize personal growth and self-actualization. Therapists foster an environment of:

- Unconditional Positive Regard: Accepting clients without judgment to promote self-exploration.
- Empathy: Understanding clients' experiences from their perspective.

4. Solution-Focused Brief Therapy (SFBT)

SFBT emphasizes finding solutions rather than focusing on problems. Key techniques include:

- Miracle Question: Asking clients to envision how their life would be different if their problems were resolved.
- Scaling Questions: Helping clients assess their progress and motivate change.

Conclusion

Presenting problems in therapy serve as the starting point for a client's therapeutic journey. They reflect the issues that significantly affect a person's life and well-being. Understanding these problems, their origins, and their impact is crucial for therapists as they guide clients toward healing and personal growth. By utilizing various therapeutic approaches and fostering a supportive environment, therapists can help clients navigate their presenting problems, paving the way for a more fulfilling and balanced life. Therapy is not just about addressing symptoms; it is about understanding the individual as a whole, facilitating deeper insights, and promoting lasting change.

Frequently Asked Questions

What are presenting problems in therapy?

Presenting problems in therapy refer to the specific issues or symptoms that clients bring to therapy sessions, which they hope to address or resolve.

How do therapists identify presenting problems?

Therapists identify presenting problems through initial assessments, interviews, and by asking clients to describe their concerns, symptoms, and the context of their issues.

Can presenting problems change during therapy?

Yes, presenting problems can evolve as therapy progresses. New issues may emerge, or the focus may shift as the client gains insight and understanding.

What is the significance of understanding presenting problems?

Understanding presenting problems is crucial for therapists as it helps tailor the therapeutic approach, set treatment goals, and measure progress throughout therapy.

Are presenting problems always related to mental health?

Not always; while many presenting problems are related to mental health issues, they can also involve relationship difficulties, life transitions, or situational stressors.

How can clients effectively communicate their presenting problems?

Clients can effectively communicate their presenting problems by being as specific as possible about their feelings, behaviors, and the impact of their issues on daily life.

What role does the therapist's perspective play in addressing presenting problems?

The therapist's perspective is important as it shapes the understanding of the client's issues, informs the therapeutic approach, and helps in identifying underlying factors contributing to the presenting problems.

How can therapists help clients prioritize their presenting problems?

Therapists can help clients prioritize presenting problems by discussing the urgency and impact of each issue, exploring which problems they feel most ready to address, and collaboratively setting treatment goals.

Find other PDF article:

<https://soc.up.edu.ph/41-buzz/Book?docid=sAM41-8773&title=mitsubishi-cnc-laser-programming-manual.pdf>

Presenting Problems In Therapy

Present content from a camera in Google Meet

You can present live video from your camera in a Google Meet video meeting to showcase objects and create interactive presentations. You can also connect to a document camera to share physical documents.

I am sharing a video, but attendees cannot hear the audio from ...

I am sharing a video, but attendees cannot hear the audio from my presentation. What's wrong? - Google Meet Community Help Center Community Google Meet ©2025 Google ...

Use Annotations in Google Meet - Computer - Google Meet Help

You're presenting in a tab or window (using full screen on a second monitor). Use Annotations on Google Meet hardware You can now annotate on supported Google Meet touchscreen devices. Supported hardware includes: Series One Board 65 Series One Desk 27 Acer Chromebase for Meetings 24V2 To use Annotations with Google Meet hardware: Open Google Meet.

Use Google Meet with Google Docs, Sheets & Slides - Google ...

Important: When you present a tab from your document, spreadsheet or presentation, you can't change which tab you present. To switch between tabs while you present, you can present from Google Meet instead. To stop your presentation, at the bottom right, click Stop presenting .

Use slides recording in Google Slides

Visit the Learning Center Using Google products, like Google Docs, at work or school? Try powerful tips, tutorials, and templates. Learn to work on Office files without installing Office, create dynamic project plans and team calendars, auto-organize your inbox, and more.

When I try to use presenter notes in Google Slides, they show up ...

When I try to use presenter notes in Google Slides, they show up on the overhead display, mirrored like my screen. I would like to have my slides show on the overhead ...

Use Companion mode for hybrid learning & collaboration

This lets you pin or eject people and presentations independently. —If there are 2 or more presentations in a meeting: People on Companion mode view the active presentation only. If the active presenter stops presenting, other presenters need to resume their presentations for people on Companion mode to view them.

when sharing a video on a google meet the video is choppy and ...

When I am presenting a video during a google meet the video is choppy and lagging for students. How can this problem be fixed?

Present during a video meeting - Computer - Google Meet Help

Present if someone else is already presenting At the bottom, click Present now. Select Your entire screen, A window, or Chrome Tab. Select Present instead.

Control Slides presentations in Google Meet

Important: To control Google Slides presentations in Google Meet, you need to sign in to an eligible work or school account. You're not currently signed in to an account. Learn more about work or scho

Present content from a camera in Google Meet

You can present live video from your camera in a Google Meet video meeting to showcase objects and create interactive presentations. You can also connect to a document camera to ...

I am sharing a video, but attendees cannot hear the audio from ...

I am sharing a video, but attendees cannot hear the audio from my presentation. What's wrong? - Google Meet Community Help Center Community Google Meet ©2025 Google ...

Use Annotations in Google Meet - Computer - Google Meet Help

You're presenting in a tab or window (using full screen on a second monitor). Use Annotations on Google Meet hardware You can now annotate on supported Google Meet touchscreen ...

Use Google Meet with Google Docs, Sheets & Slides - Google ...

Important: When you present a tab from your document, spreadsheet or presentation, you can't change which tab you present. To switch between tabs while you present, you can present ...

Use slides recording in Google Slides

Visit the Learning Center Using Google products, like Google Docs, at work or school? Try powerful tips, tutorials, and templates. Learn to work on Office files without installing Office, ...

When I try to use presenter notes in Google Slides, they show up ...

When I try to use presenter notes in Google Slides, they show up on the overhead display, mirrored like my screen. I would like to have my slides show on the overhead ...

Use Companion mode for hybrid learning & collaboration

This lets you pin or eject people and presentations independently. —If there are 2 or more presentations in a meeting: People on Companion mode view the active presentation only. If ...

when sharing a video on a google meet the video is choppy and ...

When I am presenting a video during a google meet the video is choppy and lagging for students. How can this problem be fixed?

Present during a video meeting - Computer - Google Meet Help

Present if someone else is already presenting At the bottom, click Present now. Select Your entire screen, A window, or Chrome Tab. Select Present instead.

Control Slides presentations in Google Meet

Important: To control Google Slides presentations in Google Meet, you need to sign in to an eligible work or school account. You're not currently signed in to an account. Learn more about ...

Explore common presenting problems in therapy and how they impact treatment. Discover how understanding these issues can enhance your therapeutic journey. Learn more!

Back to Home