Exam Problem Questions and Answers – PVL 3701

QUESTION 3

- (a) S transferred an exclusive right to trade on a certain piece of land to Z. Z transferred this right to his son, Zz. The right was not registered in favour of Z. S sold his farm to X. X argues that Zz is not entitled to trade on that piece of land, but Zz insists that he acquired that right from his father, Z.

Answer the following questions:

- (i) Which is the appropriate remedy to use here? Explain and refer to case law (3)
- (ii) Discuss the legal position of the parties with reference to case law (10)

This question is based on Willoughby's Consolidated Co Ltd v Copthall Stores Ltd (1913 AD 267). To answer this question, you are required to address the following issues:

- (i) the difference between a personal right and a personal servitude (limited real right), as well as the consequences of this difference for the parties in the question
- (ii) the acquisition and vesting of servitudes
- (iii) the remedy available to the parties in this question

In the question above S gave the exclusive right to trade to Z. From the facts it is clear that there was no registration of a servitude in Z's name. Z therefore acquired a personal right against S to trade exclusively on the land. Such a personal right can be transferred by means of cession to a third person, the cessionary, who steps into the shoes of the cedent (Z). The cessionary (Zz) can enforce this personal right against the debtor (S). In our question this means that Z could transfer his personal right against S to Zz. Zz could also have enforced this personal right against S. However, because it is a personal right and S has sold his land to X, Zz can enforce it against S only, but not against X. Only real rights are enforceable against third parties (see SU 2 par 2).

If Z had wanted this right to be enforceable against third parties (eg, X), he should have insisted that S register a servitude. No registration took place and therefore there was no servitude that could be enforced against X. Furthermore, even if this agreement between S and Z had been registered, it would have been a personal servitude since it was granted to Z and not in favour of another piece of land. Personal servitudes cannot be transferred and therefore even after registration of the personal servitude, Zz would still have had no right against X.

Because Zz argued that he was entitled to the exclusive right to trade and X denied the existence of his right, there was a dispute between the parties on their legal position. The appropriate remedy in such a case is a declaratory order setting out the rights of the parties. In this case Zz has no rights against X.

This article aims to address some of the most frequently asked questions regarding property law and provide comprehensive answers to guide individuals, landlords, tenants, and property buyers alike.

Understanding Property Law

Before delving into specific questions, it's important to understand what property law encompasses. Property law governs the various forms of ownership and tenancy in real estate and personal property. It includes issues such as:

- Real Property: Land and anything permanently attached to it, like buildings and fixtures.
- Personal Property: Movable items not affixed to land, such as vehicles, furniture, and equipment.
- Intellectual Property: Rights related to inventions, designs, and artistic works, although not typically covered in traditional property discussions.

This area of law can vary significantly by jurisdiction, making it crucial for individuals to seek localized advice when encountering legal issues.

Common Property Law Questions

1. What are the different types of property ownership?

Understanding property ownership types is fundamental to property law. Here are the most common forms:

- Sole Ownership: A single individual owns the property outright.
- Joint Tenancy: Two or more individuals own the property together, with equal shares and the right of survivorship, meaning if one owner dies, their share automatically goes to the surviving owner(s).
- Tenancy in Common: Similar to joint tenancy, but each owner can have unequal shares and can bequeath their share to heirs.
- Community Property: In some states, property acquired during marriage is owned jointly by both spouses.
- Trust Ownership: Property can be owned by a trust for the benefit of specific individuals.

2. What is a lease, and what are the key elements of a lease agreement?

A lease is a legally binding contract between a landlord and tenant that outlines the terms under which the tenant can occupy the property. Key elements include:

- Parties Involved: Identification of the landlord and tenant.
- Property Description: A clear description of the leased premises.

- Lease Term: The duration of the lease, including start and end dates.
- Rent Payment: The amount of rent, payment schedule, and acceptable payment methods.
- Security Deposit: Information about the security deposit amount and conditions for its return.
- Maintenance Responsibilities: Outlining who is responsible for repairs and maintenance.
- Termination Clause: Conditions under which the lease can be terminated.

3. What are the responsibilities of landlords and tenants?

Both landlords and tenants have distinct responsibilities that must be met under property law:

Landlord Responsibilities:

- Maintain the property and ensure it is habitable.
- Make necessary repairs in a timely manner.
- Provide notice before entering the property (typically 24 hours).
- Return the security deposit within the legal timeframe after the lease ends.

Tenant Responsibilities:

- Pay rent on time.
- Keep the property in good condition and report repairs needed.
- Comply with all terms of the lease agreement.
- Not engage in illegal activities on the premises.

4. What is an easement, and how does it work?

An easement is a property right that allows one party to use another party's land for a specific purpose.

There are several types of easements:

- Express Easement: Created by a written agreement.
- Implied Easement: Established by the circumstances of the property usage.
- Easement by Necessity: Granted when a property is landlocked, allowing access to the nearest public road.

Easements can be permanent or temporary and may affect property value and use. It is important for property owners to understand any easements on their land.

5. What happens if a tenant fails to pay rent?

If a tenant fails to pay rent, landlords typically follow a set legal process, which may include:

1. Notice: Issuing a formal notice to the tenant regarding the unpaid rent.
2. Grace Period: Allowing a grace period as specified in the lease agreement.
3. Eviction Proceedings: If the matter is not resolved, the landlord may file for eviction in court.
4. Court Hearing: A hearing will determine if the eviction is justified.
5. Judgment: If the court rules in favor of the landlord, the tenant may be ordered to vacate the property.

Landlords must adhere to local laws regarding eviction, which often require specific notice periods and processes.

6. Can a property owner sell their property without disclosing certain issues?

In most jurisdictions, property owners are required to disclose known material defects that could affect the value or desirability of the property. Common disclosures include:

- Structural issues
- Water damage or mold
- Pest infestations
- Lead paint or asbestos presence

Failure to disclose such issues can lead to legal repercussions, including lawsuits for fraud or misrepresentation.
