Stone Soup – ANSWER KEY

One day, a traveler, carrying nothing but a cooking pot, arrived in a small village. He had no food or money and was very hungry. The village was poor and quiet. The villagers all seemed to be locked in their houses. So, the traveler went to the center of the village. He built a fire, placed the pot on it, and poured in some water. Then he looked around and chose a perfect round stone. He placed the stone in the pot and began making soup. The traveler could feel the villagers peeking out their windows and watching him.

The pot started to boil, sending steam into the air. Slowly, the villagers, who almost never came out of their homes, started coming out to see what was going on. They were hungry and wanted to see what the traveler was making. He explained that he was making delicious stone soup. As the soup warmed, the villagers gathered and the traveler told stories from around the world. He dipped his spoon into the soup, took a taste, and said, "Delicious! But salt would really bring out the flavor."

One villager, who by now was very curious about how the soup would come out, said, "I think I might have a little bit of salt." She went home and returned with salt for the soup. The traveler continued to tell stories and taste the soup. After the next taste, he said, "Oh, that salt really helps this soup taste wonderful. But you know what would make it amazing? Carrots." One of the villagers said, "I think I might have a carrot or two in my cellar." The villager got the carrots and dropped them in the pot.

"Oh, those carrots are perfect. Now, if only we had a few onions," said the traveler on this next taste. Another villager said, "I think I have an onion or two in my kitchen." He came back and dropped his onions in the pot.

The traveler kept telling stories, stirring, and tasting. Each time he tasted, he said that celery or turnips or herbs would be a nice addition to the soup. Villagers kept bringing tiny bits of food that they had stored away: potatoes, celery, scraps of meat. Though no family had enough food for a meal, each had a little something. Every time a villager dropped food in the pot, another villager thought, "Well, if she can put something in, so I can!" and went home to find something to add.

Soon, the all of the villagers stood around the pot, breathing in the scent of the hearty soup that they had made together. When the soup was ready, they all enjoyed a satisfying meal and the company of their neighbors.
