The Early Life of Mahatma Gandhi

Birth and Education

Mahatma Gandhi was born on October 2, 1869, in Porbandar, a coastal town in present-day Gujarat, India. He was born into a Hindu family, and his father served as the chief minister of Porbandar. Gandhi's early education took place in local schools, and he later traveled to London to study law at University College London, where he was exposed to various cultural and philosophical ideas, including those of liberalism and Western political thought.

Influences and Philosophical Development

During his time in London, Gandhi became acquainted with various aspects of Western culture, but he also faced challenges as a person of Indian descent. After completing his studies, he returned to India briefly before accepting a position in South Africa to work as a legal advisor. It was in South Africa where Gandhi first encountered racial discrimination and injustice, which ignited his passion for social justice.

In South Africa, he developed the philosophy of Satyagraha, or "truth force," which advocated for nonviolent resistance to oppression. This approach would later become the cornerstone of his activism in India.
