Defiance on the Montgomery Bus

On December 1, 1955, Rosa Parks made history when she refused to comply with a bus driver's order to give up her seat to a white passenger. This act of defiance was not isolated; rather, it was the culmination of years of frustration over systemic racism and segregation.

The boycott was a significant act of collective resistance that demonstrated the power of unity among African Americans. It not only challenged the bus company's discriminatory policies but also marked the emergence of a new era of activism.
