

What Was The Great Fear

The Great Fear was a period of panic and riot by peasants amid rumors of an aristocratic conspiracy to suppress the revolution. Emerging in the summer of 1789, it marked a significant turning point in the French Revolution, illustrating the deep social and economic divisions that plagued France at the time. This article will explore the causes, events, and consequences of the Great Fear, providing a comprehensive understanding of this pivotal moment in history.

Historical Context

To fully understand the Great Fear, it is essential to consider the broader historical context of France in the late 18th century.

The Ancien Régime

The Ancien Régime, or the old order, was characterized by a feudal system that divided society into three estates:

1. First Estate: Clergy (approximately 1% of the population)
2. Second Estate: Nobility (about 2% of the population)
3. Third Estate: Common people (97% of the population, including peasants, urban workers, and the bourgeoisie)

This system created vast inequalities, with the Third Estate bearing the brunt of taxation while the upper estates enjoyed numerous privileges.

Economic Factors

In the years leading up to the Great Fear, France faced severe economic difficulties, including:

- Rising food prices: Due to poor harvests in the late 1780s, bread became increasingly expensive, leading to widespread hunger.
- Debt crisis: France's involvement in the American Revolution and extravagant spending by the monarchy had left the country in significant debt.
- Taxation: The burden of taxation fell disproportionately on the Third Estate, leading to anger and resentment.

These economic challenges contributed to a growing sense of unrest among the populace.

Triggering Events

The Great Fear was precipitated by a series of events that stoked fears among peasants and commoners.

The Estates-General and the National Assembly

In May 1789, King Louis XVI convened the Estates-General to address the financial crisis. However, the Third Estate, feeling marginalized, broke away and formed the National Assembly, signaling a shift in power. This act of defiance ignited hope among the common people and fear among the aristocracy.

The Fall of the Bastille

On July 14, 1789, the storming of the Bastille became a symbol of the revolution. This event demonstrated the willingness of the people to take direct action against the monarchy and the existing order. The news of the Bastille's fall spread quickly, heightening fears among the nobility.

Rumors and Panic

In the weeks following the Bastille's fall, rumors began to swirl, suggesting that the nobility were conspiring to crush the revolution. Reports of brigands and mercenaries being sent to attack peasants fueled paranoia. Peasants, already on edge due to economic hardship, began to arm themselves in anticipation of a noble backlash.

The Outbreak of the Great Fear

The Great Fear officially began in late July 1789 and lasted until the end of August. It was characterized by widespread panic and violence across rural France.

Peasant Revolts

As the rumors intensified, peasants took matters into their own hands. They reacted in several ways:

- Attacking manorial properties: Peasants targeted the homes of landowners, destroying records of feudal dues and claiming their rights.
- Seizing grain supplies: In areas facing severe food shortages, peasants raided granaries and stores to secure food for their families.
- Forming militias: Many communities organized themselves into militias for self-defense against perceived threats from the nobility.

These actions were often spontaneous and varied by region, reflecting the unique circumstances and grievances of each locality.

Regional Variations

The intensity and nature of the Great Fear varied significantly across France:

- Northern France: Areas like Normandy saw violent uprisings where peasants attacked the properties of nobles.
- Southern France: In regions like Languedoc, peasants were more focused on securing food rather than outright rebellion.
- Urban Areas: Cities like Paris experienced a different kind of unrest, with urban workers also joining in the revolutionary fervor.

Despite these differences, the underlying sentiment of fear and resistance to the old order was a unifying factor.

Government Response

Amidst the chaos, the National Assembly and the king struggled to respond effectively to the Great Fear.

Attempts to Restore Order

The government made several attempts to quell the unrest:

- Declaration of the Rights of Man and of the Citizen: Adopted on August 26, 1789, this document aimed to assert individual rights and equality, attempting to pacify the populace.
- Military Intervention: The Assembly called for the mobilization of the National Guard to restore order, but many soldiers sympathized with the revolution.

Despite these efforts, the panic and violence had already taken hold, leading to a significant erosion of aristocratic power.

The Dismissal of Fear

By late August 1789, the Great Fear began to wane as it became clear that the nobility's power was increasingly undermined. The events signaled a shift in the balance of power, with the monarchy losing control over the rural populace.

Consequences of the Great Fear

The Great Fear had far-reaching consequences, reshaping French society and politics.

End of Feudal Privileges

One of the most significant outcomes was the end of feudal privileges. On August 4, 1789, the National Assembly abolished feudal rights and dues, responding to the demands of the revolutionaries. This marked a profound transformation in the social structure of France.

Shift in Power Dynamics

The Great Fear solidified the power of the National Assembly and the revolutionary forces, diminishing the influence of the nobility. It set the stage for further radical changes in French society, leading to:

- The establishment of a constitutional monarchy.
- The eventual rise of more radical factions, such as the Jacobins.

Legacy of Fear

While the Great Fear subsided, the legacy of fear and suspicion lingered in French society. It highlighted the deep-seated grievances of the Third Estate and underscored the challenges that the revolutionaries faced in achieving lasting change.

Conclusion

In conclusion, the Great Fear was a critical moment in the French Revolution, characterized by panic, violence, and a profound transformation of French society. It emerged from a confluence of economic distress, political upheaval, and deeply entrenched social inequalities. The events of the summer of 1789 not only reshaped the power dynamics in France but also set the stage for the radical changes that would follow. Understanding the Great Fear is essential for comprehending the complexities of the French Revolution and the broader themes of social justice and political change that resonate throughout history.
